Perfect! Now I have found comprehensive information about Kenneth Epps. Here's what is known about Kenneth Epps, the bassist for Dub7 who later became an executive at Intel Corporation:

Musical Career with Dub7

Role in the Band

Kenneth "Kenny" Epps joined 007 as their bassist in 1982/1983, replacing Dee Rail after his departure. His addition to the band marked a significant turning point:^{[1] [2] [3]}

- Musical contribution: Kenny brought musical confidence and poise to the band, along with fresh ideas^[2]
- Name suggestion: He was the one who suggested the name "Dub7" when the band needed to rebrand from "007" due to United Artists having trademarked the name in music publishing^{[1] [2]}
- Band chemistry: His arrival coincided with John "JG" Goetchius joining on keyboards, creating a strengthened lineup that incorporated more dub elements into their sound^{[2] [1]}

Key Performances and Recording

- WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble 1984: As part of Dub7, Kenny reached the finals, finishing as runners-up to The Schemers^[1]
- Storyville bookend: He performed with Dub7 as the last rock band to ever play at the legendary Boston venue Storyville before it ceased hosting live music^[1]
- "Gavel Groove" single: Kenny played bass on Dub7's 1984 7" single "Gavel Groove" b/w "Federales," which received WBCN airplay^{[4] [5] [1]}
